Set in El Paraíso, a peaceful residential enclave of San Miguel de Allende, this inviting home brings together the warmth of traditional Mexican architecture and the ease of contemporary living. Just minutes from the historic Centro, it offers a welcome sense of privacy while keeping the city's restaurants, galleries and cultural life within easy reach.The first impression is its striking terracotta façade, framed by carved cantera stone, rich woodwork and sculptural desert plants. Traditional materials and thoughtful architectural details give the house a distinct sense of place, while its proportions and finishes create an atmosphere that feels both welcoming and quietly sophisticated.Inside, the living and dining areas unfold beneath dark wood-beamed ceilings, with natural stone floors and handcrafted columns adding texture and depth. A cantera fireplace anchors the living room, creating an intimate setting for relaxed evenings and gatherings with friends. Throughout the home, the interplay of wood, stone and...
