San Miguel de Allende boasts a plethora of Spanish Colonial mansions, but seldom does one find a single-level-living home with such international appeal as Casa de Salca! While the base architecture is Spanish Colonial in style—carved cantera stone fireplaces, columns and window surrounds, terra cotta floors, wood beams—the home is accented throughout with architectural relics from India, Morocco and Indonesia. The antique front doors, for example, feature a stylized Ganesha centered above the lintel. While sporting old-world architecture and accents, this three-year-old home offers the most
