There is a new style of architecture coming to be in San Miguel de Allende. And it's not surprising, really. Given the wide variety of cultures of people moving here to live along with the rich depth of the historic qualities of San Miguel, it is a given that the quality of architecture has come to reflect these different influences. Colonial and hacienda, North American, modern and contemporary have all been mixing and resulting in lovely properties with the solidity of Spanish colonial, the colors and textures of Mexico, the stonework that is the essence of building here and on top of all that the sensibilities of different cultures. A hint of Asian
