Country Lucky #8 is a distinctive country property in Montecillo de Nieto, centered around a remarkable stone structure believed to date from before 1800. With its chapel-like façade and European character, it has been transformed into a loft style home while preserving the presence that makes the building so special. Inside, old-world architecture meets a relaxed and eclectic way of living. High vaulted ceilings, arched windows and doors, natural light, and an open kitchen with dining and living areas create one dramatic central space rather than a traditional series of rooms. The scale of the original building gives the main residence an openness that is unusual, while the stone construction and architectural details remain an important part of the experience of the home. The main bedroom continues this character with a vaulted brick ceiling, arched windows and generous proportions, creating a private space that feels connected to the architecture of the original structure. Beyond the main residence, the...
